

6 Strategies to Discover Your Vocational Calling

1

Map Your Critical Juncture Points

What are the biggest moments in your life? Sit down and write a list of those moments, and then think about what you learned from those experiences.

2

Visualize the Life You Want

What do you REALLY want to do, but you are afraid to admit to yourself and others? Create a vision board and let the visions come out of you.

3

Meet the World's Deepest Need

What is the world's deepest need that you can meet? What can you do to add value to others? Your vocational calling is the intersection of where your deepest desire meets the world's deepest need.

4

Create a Personal Mission Statement

Create a personal mission statement for your life. Make sure it includes what your personal mission in life is, who you are going to be to accomplish this mission, and what you are going to do in order to accomplish it.

5

Fail Forward

If you aren't failing, then you are not trying. Failure is part of the process, but giving up is not. Take action, and then continually perfect the process. Clarity only comes after you have begun taking action.

6

Take the NEXT STEP

We want to have some carefully crafted plan where we see all the steps laid out before us and we just follow the path, but all we can see or take is the NEXT STEP.

I hope these 6 strategies can help you find your path to discovering your vocational calling. If you need more help, hop on my website at grahamhoneycutt.com and fill out my online coaching form to see if I can help you reach new levels of success.

Graham Honeycutt